Cellarettes: A Toast to a Southern Tradition

The South has many traditions and iconic tangible parts of its history. The cellarette is certainly among those things. It is a very recognizable form, at least for those who know Southern furniture. It is a foreign object to most though, rarely if ever seen in use in modern home furnishings. This year's annual Ives Lecture will focus on this important and nearly-forgotten form of furniture. Lecture attendees will learn about the history of the cellarette including the origin, construction, evolution, and its role in Southern culture.

Cellarette, part of Historic Hope Foundation's collection

This is a rare opportunity to see a number of very important period examples in person. More than a half-dozen examples from northeastern North Carolina and southeastern Virginia will be on display. Be sure to mark your calendar and reserve your seat with us as we toast to this timeless Southern form of furniture.
